USSR
General of the Army Dmitriy Timofeyevich YAZOV
June 1988

(U) NAME: General of the Army (US General) Dmitriy Timofeyevich Yazov (YA-soff), Army.

(U) POSITION: Minister of Defense since May 1987. Replaced Marshal of the Soviet Union Sergey Leonidovich Sokolov.

(U) SIGNIFICANCE: General of the Army Yazov's selection as Minister of Defense was unexpected. It had been rumored for some months that Minister of Defense Sokolov would be replaced; however, Yazov was not believed to be a front runner. Yazov was picked by Gorbachev to ensure "perestroika" ("restructuring") takes place in the military. As Deputy Minister of Defense for Personnel since January 1987, Yazov had been in charge of implementing personnel changes in the military.

1988

(U) General Yazov's rise to the position of Minister of Defense occurred after a 19 year old West German violated Soviet airspace and piloted a single engine plane from Finland to Red Square. The incident was an embarrassment to the leadership, because it suggested weaknesses in Soviet air defense capabilities. The incident triggered the retirement of Minister of Defense Solokov. The Politburo also fired Commander-in-Chief of the Air Defense Forces Marshal Aleksandr Koldunov. The appointment of General Yazov represents a break in traditional career patterns. In the post-war period, professional military men given the top MOD post have been promoted from one of the first deputy minister positions. Yazov was vaulted over several more senior contenders.

(U) General Yazov is a 1967 graduate of the General Staff Academy. One of his classmates is Marshal of the Soviet Union Sergey Akhromeyev, First Deputy Minister of Defense and Chief of the General Staff.

(U) POLITICS: Member of the Communist Party of the Soviet Union since 1944; Deputy to the Council of Nationalities, USSR Supreme Soviet, 1979; Candidate member of the Central Committee, March 1981, 1986; Delegate to the 26th CPSU Congress June 1981.
